President's Message

One day it's summer, and then - - well, you were here! Now it really feels like fall, at least some days. So time to do those fall things: clean up some things, but leave some for the bugs and other critters to enjoy. This should be a good time to work on invasive honeysuckle while they're starting to go dormant, they supposedly absorb the glyphosate more effectively now. Tidy up any other plants that aren't food for birds, like iris leaves and peony stems, it keeps them healthier. Raking leaves is the new contentious point – they do make excellent mulch but can suffocate grass if too thick. Mow 'em, Dano, and let 'em go! In the woods they just settle and become next year's compost, so I try to just tidy, and (leave).

Still trying to get my head together, only somewhat effectively, and my watch is still on island time. Hope to see many of you on Saturday for AIG! Trowels up -

Communicate

It is very important to keep our members informed. A great avenue to do this is through the monthly Newsletter. The input received this month has been very much appreciated.

Next Meeting

Our next general meeting will be October 18. The educational topic will be by Sam Lashley, Senior Meteorologist with the National Weather Service (Warning and Forecast Operations).

New HCMG Website

A lot of effort has been expended on the development of the new HCMG website. Igor

Kalenyy and I have fleshed out a site that we believe will provide a lot of information to our members and will be of great value.

We intend to start out with the basic functionality that we believe will be of most value, and expand upon that platform based on input from our members.

One of the basic intents in choosing the platform that we did is to provide flexibility so that we can easily integrate such things as an "Ask A Master Gardener" capability where we can capture questions from the public and respond back easily...as well as sharing those Q's and A's with everyone. We have a lot of knowledge to share.

The draft site will be demonstrated to the Board at their next meeting and to the members at the October 18 meeting.

A testament to the immense complexity of nature, The Biggest Little Farm follows two dreamers and a dog on an odyssey to bring harmony to both their lives and the land. When the barking of their beloved dog Todd leads to an eviction notice from their tiny LA apartment, John and Molly Chester make a choice that takes them out of the city and onto 200 acres in the foothills of Ventura County, naively endeavoring to build one of the most diverse farms of its kind in complete coexistence with nature. The land they've chosen, however, is utterly depleted of nutrients and suffering from a brutal drought.

THE BIGGEST LITTLE FARM chronicles the eight-year quest of John and Molly Chester as they trade city living for 200 acres of barren farmland and a dream to harvest in harmony with nature.

Through dogged perseverance and embracing the opportunity provided by nature's conflicts, the Chester's unlock and uncover a biodiverse design for living that exists far beyond their farm, its seasons, and our wildest imagination.

Featuring breathtaking cinematography, captivating animals, and an urgent message to heed Mother Nature's call, THE BIGGEST LITTLE FARM provides us all a vital blueprint for better living and a healthier planet.

Returning Houseplants to the Indoors

John Chapin posted an article on Facebook that I thought would be interesting to share:

It's common practice for people to "summer" their houseplants outdoors, tucked under shrubs, set on a shaded patio, or in the protection of a covered porch. Houseplants really benefit from natural rainfall and humidity. The cooler days and crisp nights of late September and early October, before danger of frost, signal that it's time to bring them back indoors to enjoy over the winter.

However, you don't want to bring in any pests that are likely to hitch a ride on your plants. Aphids and mealybugs are the most common houseplant pests that can quickly become a problem, even a major infestation within weeks of placing your plants in their winter settings.

De-bugging and cleaning your houseplants before bringing them indoors is actually not all that difficult. Simply mix a few squirts of mild dish soap or insecticidal soap in a large bucket of warm water. (Don't use any soaps that contain degreasers or detergents that can damage or even kill the plants.) Some recommend that you submerge the whole pot in the soapy water for 15 minutes, but I usually don't, opting to wet down the foliage which then drips into the soil, using a spray bottle, pump sprayer, or even a watering can till the foliage is dripping. This cleans the foliage as well as kills pests. After twenty minutes or so, rinse the plants with a garden hose, then let drain and dry.

Even with these precautions, you will likely have problems with houseplant pests, especially mealybugs and scale, both of which are very difficult to eradicate. For many years now, I have used a systemic insecticide on all of my houseplants after bringing them indoors for the winter. It's easy to use, and protection lasts all winter. Simply mix in water according to the directions and water your plants the first time they need watering after bringing them indoors. Once and done!

One more bit of advice: Most all houseplants are tropicals, and although they grow more slowly over the winter months, they definitely benefit from continuous fertilization. I mix a very small amount of houseplant fertilizer in water (I prefer to use rainwater which I store on old plastic gallon milk jugs.) that I then use every time I water my houseplants.
